

Dr. Fiona Peters

AUTHOR . SPEAKER . TRAINER . CONSULTANT

Fiona Peters is a UK-based leading expert in neurodiversity in the workplace and in personal life, and an authority on the impact of the mixed-race classification in organisations and families. Her background in research began in documentary, news and current affairs before moving into academia as a Sociology PhD candidate. She then transitioned into research, lecturing, and consultancy. Her first book was published by Palgrave Macmillan in 2016 and was short-listed for the BSA Philip Abrams Memorial Prize for the best first and sole-authored book within the discipline of sociology. Her second non-fiction book was selected for the Harper Collins' inaugural Author Academy in 2021.

Her late adulthood ADHD diagnosis enabled her to embrace her strengths of creativity, hyper focus, and communication and is a driver for understanding and harnessing the talents of people with neurodiverse conditions at work. Fiona is of mixed race; her mother is from Dominica and her father is from Sweden. She was born in the UK; her personal experience offers a unique perspective on the impact environments have on the ability to survive or thrive. Fiona Peters offers both personal and professional experience to raise awareness of neurodiversity and is a popular in-demand speaker and host.

Testimonials

The Necessary Rebels Podcast invited Dr. Fiona Peters, who illustrated a very niche area to the audience in a relatable way. Her interview spanned several socially, culturally, and ethnically sensitive subjects which she translated with care, thoughtfulness, and balanced viewpoints.

She presented complex issues with skill, often drawing on professional and personal experience to convey topics in everyday terms. Her interview style was conversational and commands an audience by offering brave insights and contrasting views, unafraid to challenge the status quo or speak her truth!
